Automated Parts Counting Machine

automation artisans

This project is an automated parts counting machine developed using a combination of embedded firmware (likely running on a microcontroller such as Arduino or ESP32) and a Python-based interface or backend for data processing, visualization, and communication.

The system is designed to accurately count mechanical or electronic parts (such as nuts, bolts, or electronic components) as they pass through a sensor-based detection unit. This helps improve efficiency in inventory management, packaging, and quality control processes in manufacturing environments.
